Dear George:

I believe [redacted] talked to you briefly yesterday afternoon about an engineer that we are forced to release by the name of [redacted]. Unfortunately [redacted] left hastily on leave last night and was unable to convey your recommendation to [redacted].

I shall attempt to telephone you later today to make an appointment for [redacted] if you are interested. If I should not contact you or for that matter in any case I would like to recommend [redacted] to you very highly. He has been with us approximately 26 months during which time he played an extremely valuable part in the construction of our new station [redacted] and in its operation since construction. He is an able radio engineer, very affable and extremely well liked by his fellow employees and superiors.

If you have an opening for a man with [redacted] qualifications, I can strongly recommend him without reservation and I would appreciate any consideration you might be in a position to give him.

Sincerely,
